Program to curb youth crime stalled

metro EXCLUSIVE

City has set aside $100K but additional funds needed

May Warren
Metro | Toronto

Youth advocates are calling out the provincial and federal governments for not delivering on money pledged for an innovative new program they say could help curb gun violence in the city.

About $400,000 for a citywide program called pre-charge diversion was promised in June as one of a series of measures to prevent crime. It was supposed to start this fall.

"We were all ecstatic about it, and, as of yet, we have not heard anything from anyone really about the money being rolled out," said Veronica Salvatierra, youth criminal justice co-ordinator at St. Stephen's Community House.

The new program is supposed to be based on a pilot between the community agency and police at Toronto's 14 Division. Aimed at people between the ages of 12 and 17, it allows youth charged with minor crimes to avoid being charged by attending workshops and mentoring sessions.

The idea is that by keeping

“It's a classic case of, an announcement was made, and the dollars never arrived, and the work's not being done.”

them out of the justice system they can get their lives back on track, instead of going down a road that could lead to more serious crimes, including gun violence, in the future.

Coun. Joe Cressy, Toronto's Youth Equity advocate, said the program can represent a second chance, at a critical "tipping point" in young people's lives.

But, right now, the people who need help have been left to wait.

"An announcement was made, a ribbon was cut, the money never arrived, the work was never done," Cressy said about the program's delay.

The city has already allocated $100,000 in its own budget, according to city staff, and done prep work, but the additional funds are needed to start rolling out the program.

It's not clear how much each higher level of government has committed.

Metro's requests for comment from the Ministry of the Attorney General and Ministry of Child and Youth Services were directed to the Ministry of Community Safety and Correctional Services.

Yanni Dagonas, a spokesman there, did not respond to questions about why there is a delay and when the money will arrive. The province "remains committed to providing funding as soon as possible," he said in a statement.

The federal Ministry of Public Safety and Emergency Preparedness, also named in the initial city release on the program, did not immediately respond to a request for comment.

Two arrested in U.S. man's beating death

Toronto police have charged two men with second-degree murder after Baltimore college student Julian Jones, 26, was punched, kicked and stomped to death as he lay helpless on the street in Little Italy last weekend.

Homicide investigators are seeking a third suspect who's described as white, male, in his late 20s and slim, Det. Sgt. Gary Giroux told a news conference on Thursday morning.

Jones died en route to hospital early Saturday morning after he was punched and kicked in the head outside Blind Tiger on College Street.

The arrests of the two suspects were made without incident on Wednesday after police studied a cellphone video of the attack on Jones, Giroux said.

Jones and a group of friends were visiting Toronto for a bachelor party, police say.

"The deceased and his friends were set upon by a group of males who wanted to fight," Insp. Bryan Bott said on Thursday.

"Mr. Jones and his friends are not the aggressors," Giroux said. It was Toronto's 58th homicide of 2016.

Jones was separated from a group of five to eight friends and beaten to death as he lay semi-conscious on the street, Giroux said.

Jones' friends are now back in the U.S., Giroux said. Some of them were injured in the attack, he said. "I may send investigators to the U.S. to do photo lineups," Giroux said.

He said police are not releasing images because they do not want to spoil photo lineups with potential witnesses.

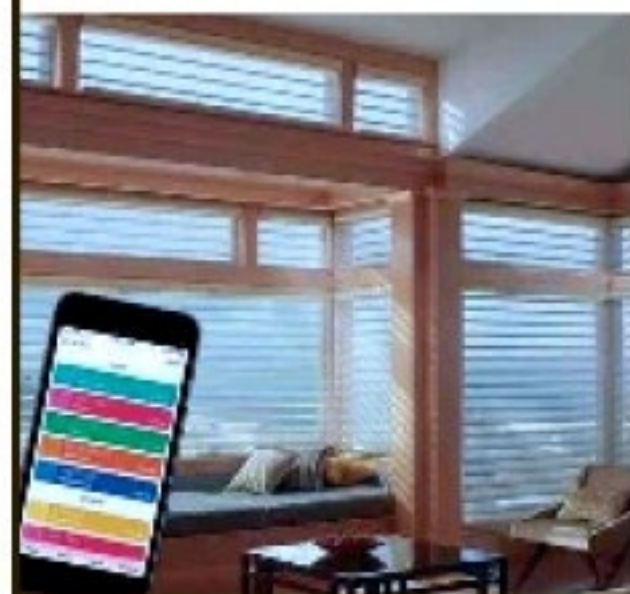

"I would describe the key evidence as a cellphone video," Giroux said. "It was taken by one of the friends of the deceased from Maryland."

Kamari Folkes, 24, and Kenneth Omorogbe, 25, were each charged with second-degree murder. They appeared at Old City Hall court this morning and were remanded in custody until Nov. 22. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

FIRST WORLD WAR

Remember with paper poppies

To memorialize soldiers and nurses killed in the First World War, a Toronto lawyer is proposing that paper poppies be displayed on their former homes for Remembrance Day, 2018.

The project, spearheaded by Patrick Shea, would see temporary poppy markers distributed to the homes associated with those deceased veterans. The occupants would be encouraged to place those poppies — 10 to 13 centimetres in diameter — in a front window or other prominent location for the week leading up to Nov. 11, 2018. That will be the 100th anniversary of the war's end.

Beneath the poppy, on the weatherproof paper, will be the phrase We Will Remember Them.

The aim "is to show the impact of a war on a community," explained Shea, who is hoping to work with Heritage Toronto on this idea. Shea has also sent his proposal to The Royal Canadian Legion seeking permission to use the poppy symbol.

While the exact address of a deceased veteran can, sometimes, be inexact, Shea said the key is that it is "an address associated with an individual who was killed."

For some deceased, that would mean poppies are distributed to more than one home.

The temporary poppies, which will cost about 40 cents each to make, would be mailed with a letter of explanation to homeowners. Shea is still arranging funding for printing the markers, though it may be covered by his law firm, Gowling WLG.

He hopes the poppies can eventually be replaced by permanent ceramic ones.

REMEMBRANCE DAY

Think of them as an early form of tweets and email.

War posters — whether asking people to enlist or to support the military effort financially — were the only to reach onto the streets and urge people to take action.

"They didn't have Internet or TV or social media back then," said Tania Henley, senior service specialist at the Toronto Reference Library. "These posters were the only way of communication between government and the citizens."

The library's special collections department has been collecting the wartime memorabilia — once plastered on walls and storefronts across the country — for years, and is now home to a base-ment archive of more than 500 posters from the World Wars.

They become especially popular around Remembrance Day, serving as pieces of living history that provide a perspective into the politics of the day, Henley said.

Messages on the posters

“These posters were the only way of communication between government and the citizens.”

vary from patriotic to outright shaming of those who didn't join up.

At the end of the First World War, there were posters encouraging Canadians to show their patriotism by buying "victory bonds," some of which were offered at a very competitive rate return — about 5.5 per cent on a $50 investment in 1918.

"They really tell people of today what people of that time were thinking, what their concerns were," Henley said.

"It gives you a first-hand view of what was going on."

Chief halts grey police car rollout

City derides dark vehicles as an attempt to look 'cool'

Toronto cop cruisers will remain white, red and blue, at least for now, after police Chief Mark Saunders reversed a decision to replace them with new, much criticized, dark grey cruisers.

"There are people who like them. There are people who don't like them. The concern that has been expressed has convinced me that further work is necessary," Saunders said in a statement Thursday.

Less than 24 hours earlier, city council passed a motion asking the Toronto Police Services Board to retain the current colour scheme of its patrol cars "pending further review."

The motion said the "stealth grey, militaristic colour scheme" sent the wrong message to the public, and the decision seemed prompted by a desire to choose a "cool-looking" design over one "that encourages public respect and engagement."

Any decision should be backed up by science and not whim.
Michael Felip

Safety experts have also been critical of the grey for its lack of visibility on city streets.

At its last meeting, the Toronto police civilian oversight board asked Saunders to explain the rationale behind the colour switch because board members had not been consulted.

Saunders said at the time he didn't think he needed board input and that no "deep thought" went into it.

The rollout, which began in September, was supposed to happen over three years. To date, slightly more than 100 grey cruisers are on the road.

On Thursday, the retired staff sergeant responsible for introducing the white cruisers to Toronto streets welcomed the news that Saunders had reconsidered.

When Michael Felip first heard the police fleet was going grey, he thought it was not a well-thought out decision and wondered, "Where's the science?"

Thirty years ago, the then Metropolitan Toronto Police force assigned dark coloured cars to officers who were working undercover — not on general patrol.

"Grey cars blended into the background. That was the whole idea of them," Felip said Thursday. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

ROAD SAFETY

Parents who pushed for better road safety near their schools and in their communities prompted new legislation that will allow municipalities to install photo radar and lower speed limits, Premier Kathleen Wynne said Thursday.

At a news conference at Northlea public school in Toronto's Leaside neighbourhood — in her riding — Wynne said families there were among those across the province "saying, 'We need to see something happen. You know, the streets are filled with cars that are driving too fast, and we're worried about our kids.'"

Cities will also be able to lower speed limits in school and community-safety zones from the typical 50 or 40 km/h, she added.

Drivers who are caught will face fines but not demerit points, said Transportation Minister Steven Del Duca, adding that it will be up to communities to install cameras or reduce speed limits, or do both. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

She'd like to see financial literacy education so kids understand what loans and buying a home really involve.

Christie currently rents with her husband but would love to buy if prices weren't so high.

"We are now sort of the first generation for whom home ownership is not a reasonable milestone," she said.

Christie would like to see more incentives for condo living, including financial assistance and more infrastructure geared towards vertical communities.

The casino says there is no indication the hacker still has access to the Casino Rama system. However, it is possible stolen information may be published.

The casino is working with the Ontario Provincial Police, RCMP, Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corporation and Alcohol and Gaming Commission of Ontario. The provincial and federal privacy commissioners have also been alerted of the breach.

Core doubles its influence

Prior ward boundaries 'hopelessly out of whack'

Luke Simcoe
Metro | Toronto

People living in the core are about to get a louder voice at Toronto City Council.

A plan to increase the number of city councillors from 44 to 47 ahead of the 2018 election will double the number of downtown wards — and that means more voting power on everything that affects the people who live there, local politicians and experts say.

Ryerson politics professor Myer Siemiatycki called the decision, which passed council Wednesday, "a good day for local democracy in Toronto."

"The prior ward boundaries were getting hopelessly out of whack with any basic principle of representation by population. Some wards have literally twice the population of others,"

If the list of new ward boundaries had been in effect this term, some feel the eastern portion of the Gardiner Expressway would no longer be standing. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE FILE he said.

Nowhere is that disparity more apparent than downtown, where a population of nearly 250,000 people is now spread across wards 20, 27 and 28. Under the new plan, downtown will have six councillors.

"You had three councillors trying to manage the equivalent of a small city," said Ward 20 Coun. Joe Cressy. "Our constituents' voices weren't being given equal weight."

Siemiatycki predicts the change — which means losing a ward in the west end of the city — will have a "ripple effect" on Toronto's political landscape.

"Mayor John Tory's support on council now comes from more suburban areas," he said. "Politicians from the city core tend to have a different mindset and a different set of priorities."

Ward 28 Coun. Pam Mc-

+ BACKGROUND

On Wednesday, council approved a plan to increase the total number of city councillors from 44 to 47 ahead of the 2018 election.

The result will redraw the boundaries of all but six wards, and create three new wards downtown.

Connell said that if the new boundaries had been in place this term, some key votes may have gone differently.

"Just look at the votes we lost, like on the Gardiner," she said, referencing the 24-21 decision not to tear down the eastern leg of the aging expressway. "When you look at some of these really important issues, three or four votes can make the difference between moving forward or standing still."

Rather than stoking the flames of the urban-suburban divide, McConnell said the ward changes are an opportunity for the entire city to be represented more equitably.

Emoji epics, in terrific translation

Readers' iconic responses to "How was your day?"

For this week's Metro Arts Challenge, we asked you to tell us a story about your day, but with a language restriction: Emojis only. From ambulance-worthy accidents (get well soon Vera) to furry friends and election day and everything in between, you rose to the task once again. We got far too many to print.

CHALLENGE WINNER

Vera Teschow sent us her emoji essay with this note: "The day I got burned with hot water last week at the office... As told in emojis! I have some disgusting photos of my actual second degree leg burns too if you're interested." This story had plot, which is why our art director Jason Logan chose it as his favourite. Congrats Vera!

Trudeau praises vets, reopens service centre

VETERANS AFFAIRS

Part of effort across country to get offices back in place

Justin Trudeau paid tribute to Canada's veterans Thursday during an emotional visit to a Royal Canadian Legion branch in Cape Breton, where the prime minister chatted and posed for selfies with old warriors, many of them wearing rows of medals from past conflicts.

The visit, scheduled a day before Remembrance Day, followed the official reopening of a Veterans Affairs office in Sydney, which was closed amid much protest in January 2014 when Stephen Harper was prime minister.

"The closing of the service centre here in Sydney was a catalyst for change, symbolizing the neglect that veterans were subject to under the previous government," Trudeau told a crowd of about 200, most of them shivering as an icy wind cut across the front of the newly renovated building.

"Today, we're doing what we should do much more of: honouring our men and women in uniform, past and present."

Trudeau said the Conservative party had "lost its sense of what was actually important" when it shuttered nine Veterans Affairs offices across the country in 2014, including Cape Breton's only dedicated office.

The office closures became part of a larger narrative about the Harper government's treatment of former soldiers, sailors and airmen, amid a growing list of complaints about pensions, benefits and lack of treatment for mental illnesses.

Harper's cost-cutting move prompted vigorous protests. Rallies were held in several cities.

At Thursday's ceremony, Trudeau said it was a priority for his year-old government to re-open veterans' offices across the country. He said they plan to open a 10th office in Surrey, B.C., and said hundreds of staff have been hired across the country to lower wait times and improve service.

Veterans Affairs Minister Kent Hehr said the new Sydney office will employ 15 people, and about 140 veterans will also work with case managers.

"We are committing to ensuring that they get the support that they deserve," Hehr said, noting that about 2.3 million Canadians have served in the military since Confederation. "I can't imagine a more appropriate tribute so close to Remembrance Day."

AMBER ALERT

Saskatchewan police find missing girl's body

RCMP in Saskatchewan say they have found the body of a missing seven-year-old girl who had been the subject of an Amber Alert. The alert was issued by police in Nipawin overnight after Nia Eastman was not returned to her mother.

Police said Nia's father, Adam Jay Eastman, was found dead earlier in the day from self-inflicted injuries. Officers found the girl's body in a home in Choiceland, a small community not far from Nipawin, where the father rented a home.

Nia Eastman HANDOUT

RCMP Insp. Jennifer Ebert said investigators were trying to piece together what happened after Nia's father picked her up from school on Wednesday.

On Tuesday a Facebook page belonging to a Jay Eastman features photos of a little girl and an unidentified woman. On Wednesday, the cover photo was changed to a picture of a skull and crossbones with the slogan: "Leave me alone. I've had enough." There were no further posts after that. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Demonstrators chanting 'not my president!'

Demonstrators took to the streets in San Francisco and gathered in a New York City park Thursday to express their outrage over Donald Trump's unexpected presidential win while Trump supporters took to social media and denounced demonstrators as hypocrites or worse for not accepting defeat in a democratic process.

High-spirited high school students marched through San Francisco's downtown, chanting "not my president" and holding signs urging a Donald Trump eviction. They waved rainbow banners and Mexican flags, as bystanders in the heavily Democratic city high-fived the marchers from the sidelines.

"As a white, queer person, we need unity with people of colour, we need to stand up," said Claire Bye, a 15-year-old sophomore at Academy High School. "I'm fighting for my rights as an LGBTQ person. I'm fighting for the rights of brown people, black people, Muslim people."

In New York City, about a hundred protesters gathered at Union Square in Manhattan to protest a Trump presidency. They held signs that read "Divided States of America" and "Not My President" and "Let the New Generation Speak!!"

At a subway station along 14th Street, New Yorkers expressed their thoughts — "Time to Fight Back" and "Keep the Faith! Our work is just beginning!" — along the walls of a walkway using sticky notes.

On Twitter, Trump supporters accused protesters of not respecting the process because it didn't work out in their favour.

"You're literally protesting against free democratic elections. Go live in North Korea, you absolute trash," one said. "They're not protesting Trump, they're protesting democracy and the right to disagree with them. Isn't that fascism," said another.

Thousands demonstrated Wednesday around the country, from New England to Kansas City to the West Coast. Flames lit up the night sky in California cities as protesters burned a giant papier-mache Trump head in Los Angeles and started fires in Oakland intersections.

In Chicago, where thousands had recently poured into the streets to celebrate the Chicago Cubs' first World Series victory in over a century, several thousand people marched through the Loop. They gathered outside Trump Tower, chanting "Not my president!"

Since Tuesday night, protesters have marched in the Midwest. Marchers protesting Trump's election chanted and carried signs in front of the Trump International Hotel in Washington, D.C.

'If you succeed, the country succeeds'

President-elect Donald Trump took a triumphant tour of the nation's capital Thursday, holding a cordial White House meeting with President Barack Obama, sketching out priorities with Republican congressional leaders and taking in the majestic view from where he'll be sworn in to office.

Trump's meeting with Obama spanned 90 minutes, longer than originally scheduled. Obama said he was "encouraged" by Trump's willingness to work with his team during the transition of power, and the Republican called the president a "very good man."

"I very much look forward to dealing with the president in the future, including his counsel," Trump said from the Oval Office. He'll begin occupying the office on Jan. 20.

Publicly, the two men appeared to put aside their animosity. As the meeting concluded and journalists scrambled out of the Oval Office, Obama smiled at his successor and explained the unfolding scene.

"We now are going to want to do everything we can to help you succeed because if you succeed the country succeeds," Obama said.

Trump also sketched out priorities for his presidency.

"We're going to move very strongly on immigration," he said. "We will move very strongly on health care. And we're looking at jobs. Big league jobs."

President-elect bucks protocol on press access

President-elect Donald Trump is keeping America in the dark about his earliest conversations and decisions about his incoming government, and bucking a long-standing practice intended to ensure the public has a watchful eye on the nation's new leader.

Trump on Thursday refused to allow journalists to travel with him to Washington for his historic first meeting with President Barack Obama and congressional leaders. The Republican's top advisers rebuffed news organizations' requests for a small "pool" of journalists to trail Trump as he attended meetings in Washington.

The decision was part of an opaque pattern in Trump's first moves since his victory Tuesday. His team has not put out a daily schedule, or offered any detailed updates on how he has spent his time. They have not acknowledged phone calls or other contact with world leaders.

Abrupt move to scrap notes a problem for expatriates

Some Torontonians are finding themselves with worthless wads of cash after the Indian government abruptly scrapped its highest-denomination currency notes this week.

Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi announced Tuesday in a surprise broadcast that his government was withdrawing all 500 and 1,000 Indian rupee notes — which are equivalent to about $10 and $20. He said the action was being taken to combat corruption, money laundering and counterfeiting in India, where there is a significant amount of so-called undeclared, untaxed “black money.”

People in India were told to deposit their discontinued notes in banks and post office savings accounts before the end of the year. They were also told they could exchange limited amounts for new 500 and 2,000 rupee bills that are being delivered.

But for anyone with the cancelled currency outside India there appears to be confusion on what to do with the discontinued bills. Sachin Jindal, a Toronto resident, has tried — but failed — to exchange his rupees at multiple locations since Modi's announcement.

Jindal typically keeps about 15,000 rupees, worth about $300, on hand for travel to India so he has money available when he lands in a country where a large amount of daily transactions are conducted with cash.

The 30-year-old has no plans to travel back to India for at least a year, which means he would miss the Dec. 30 deadline to turn in the old bills at an Indian bank, as well as a March 31 deadline to bring the bills in to certain special offices with a declaration form.

“It's very much frustrating,” he said. “If the government has to take these steps, at least for the people living abroad who don't have access to the banks, they should be provided with some minimum time amount or they should be provided with a place that they can go and convert it.”

“We're advising clients to hold on to their existing banknotes until we receive further clarity around the circulation of new ones.”

Royal Bank of Canada spokesman AJ Goodman.

TD Bank said all Canadian banks, including its own branches, are “unable” to process, buy or sell transactions of Indian rupees. Wire payments are not affected.

The Royal Bank of Canada said it would be unable to buy or sell rupees in any denomination until it is given details on when the new banknotes are available and in circulation.

“We are advising clients to hold on to their existing banknotes until we receive further clarity around the circulation of new ones,” said spokesman AJ Goodman. THE CANADIAN PRESS

CRITICISM

Chinese man new Interpol president

A top Chinese police official was elected president of Interpol on Thursday, setting off alarm bells among rights advocates over abuses and a lack of transparency within China's legal system, as well as the potential misuse of the police organization to attack Beijing's political opponents.

Vice Public Security Minister Meng Hongwei was named as the first Chinese to hold the post at the organization's general assembly on the Indonesian island of Bali. Interpol announced in a press release.

The Lyon, France-based International Criminal Police Organization has 190 member nations and has the power to issue “red notices.” It's the closest instrument to an international arrest warrant in use today. Interpol circulates those notices to member countries listing people who are wanted for extradition.

DROUGHT

Wildfires in America's south force many towns to evacuate

All but a few of America's largest active wildfires Thursday were burning in the south, where a relentless drought has turned pine trees into torches and forced evacuations in dozens of communities in the Appalachian foothills.

High winds, unseasonably warm temperatures and weeks without rain have combined to spark blaze after blaze in the dry brush and trees. Numerous teams of firefighters reported blazes running up slopes and down ravines as they struggled to protect hundreds of threatened structures.

“It just smells like a campfire” along the Appalachian Trail in north Georgia, said Carlie Gentry, who works at the Mountain Crossings store at Walasi-yi, a popular stop for hikers. “For weeks up here we've been having smoke, but it is getting more intense for sure,” Gentry said. Typically, the view stretches for miles, she said. Now, “you can hardly see to the next ridge.”

Thursday's national drought report shows 41.6 million people in parts of 15 southern states living in drought conditions. The worst drought is in Georgia, Alabama, Mississippi and Tennessee, but extreme drought also is spreading into the western Carolinas, and Kentucky and Tennessee had the most fires. EMMA TEITEL ON LIBERAL BUBBLE SYNDROME

Many well-heeled American progressives think that far more people think and act like 'us' than they actually do, because we reside in an echo chamber, both on- and offline.

On Tuesday afternoon, a friend added me to a Facebook group called Pantsuit Nation: the digital home of more than three million Hillary Clinton supporters, thousands of them, American women and men who donned pantsuits to head to the polls in solidarity with their chosen candidate.

Many of these people not only hoped, but sincerely expected that Clinton would prevail on election night. I did, too.

Wednesday morning, President-elect Donald Trump was no longer the stuff of hypothetical scenarios or nightmares, but a hideous reality. And Pantsuit Nation was but a dream.

In the words of one forlorn but hopeful citizen of PN: "Ladies, we must take back the Congress and our state legislatures. Who is running?" In the words of another, less hopeful citizen: "How did this happen?"

It happened for about a dozen reasons we've heard at least a hundred times already: The Democratic status quo, led by an unpopular, untrustworthy female candidate, failed to get out the vote where it counted and win over a disenfranchised white middle class that preferred hope and change-style xenophobia to establishment liberal platitudes.

In addition to this, Clinton's camp likely did not foresee the influence that closeted Trump supporters had in the voting booth: voters otherwise known — in the words of CNN anchor Jake Tapper — as "leaners" on account of their habit of "leaning in" to inform friends and journalists that they preferred Trump, in fear that doing so publicly would result in embarrassment (which in many parts of the United States, it would).

Moore predicted a Trump win months ago, was the progressive response a collective "yeah, right"? Why did so many liberals on both sides of the border assume in their hearts that at the end of the day, things would be OK? That the Trump candidacy was, like the candidate's reality television show, a freakish but temporary spectacle?

For starters, there are the polls, which consistently put Clinton ahead

That thing is Liberal Bubble Syndrome: the belief on the part of many well-heeled North American progressives that far more people think and act like "us" than they actually do because we reside in an echo chamber, both on- and offline. This condition breeds not only false hope but complacency: the assumption that truth wins out every time, that sanity in our politics is the rule, not the exception, and that words such as "tyranny" and "unrest" apply to people and places overseas but will never realistically apply here.

(For those "optimists" who are so keen on reassuring anti-Trump minorities not to fret because "there's no way in hell he'll do anything he says he'll do," consider this: The mere possibility that he might fulfil just one of his promises where Muslims, undocumented immigrants, and LGBT people are concerned, is sufficiently terrifying.)

What's so troubling about Trump's win isn't merely that it was a surprise, but that his detractors, many of them otherwise very serious and sober pundits, believed it was an improbability worth laughing about.

Well it wasn't. Political unrest and yes, fascism, are not just faraway ideas that exist to terrify and terrorize faraway people. This continent is just as susceptible as any other to chaos. It's time we started acting like it.

Emma Teitel is a national columnist for the Toronto Star.

Metro Science will return Nov. 18.

CAUGHT WITH THEIR PANTS DOWN The 'Pantsuit Nation' of Hillary Clinton supporters were caught off guard by Donald Trump's victory in part because they ensconced themselves in a liberal bubble, Emma Teitel writes.

CANADIAN PANTSUIT NATION/FACEBOOK

But "how did this happen?" — though an extremely important question — seems to have overshadowed another equally important question: Why are we so shocked that it did?

Why, in other words, is the election result such an earth-shattering surprise to everyone? Why, when documentarian Michael and may have given some Trump-wary voters false hope that the Republican candidate would be toast whether they showed up to vote or not. But there is something else at play here — something else that fuels this "Oh My God, I Can't Believe It!" rejoinder, and it runs much deeper than misleading, erroneous polls.

I think Trump voters know full well what they have done

Rosemary Westwood
For Metro

The nation of Trump looks exactly the same, here, as it did before. Wild roosters still crow up the sun. Neighbours still wave, "How you doin'?"

"The beat goes on," said the man behind the grocery till. But it feels devastating. It feels, to quote one friend, "like a death."

Each morning I — and millions of grieving others — are waking up to be hit again by this new reality. A president-elect who championed misogyny and racism in prime-time, a con artist selling an unachievable dream of white, male, isolationist prosperity.

I truly believed the time had come for a woman to rise to this rarified height of power. And while Hillary Clinton may have won the popular vote, as Michael Moore reminded liberals in his viral "Morning after to-do list" Facebook post, it was by a mere one per cent.

In New Orleans, a hard-blue city in a sea of Louisiana red, the sadness is palpable. So is disbelief. Even despair. It's not, as one black woman I talked to noted, as if racism came out of nowhere. Nor misogyny. They were here. But so many (so many white people?) could not have predicted how widespread they lived in their fellow citizens.

The most upsetting part isn't that some people harbour hatred for others based on race, origin, gender or sexuality, or are willing to fuel that hatred in pursuit of a snake-oil salesman's impossible promises. It's that so, so many do, and did.

One Washington-based friend warned these voters don't know what they've done. I think they do. I think they realize Trump may be an illusion. I think they're so afraid, or desperate, or angry, or arrogant, or obsessed with creating their own reality, they'd risk the dangers of Trump for a chance to make the world recognizable again.

But there is also an air of defiance. Perhaps, a left-wing reinvigoration.

Moore's list includes fighting words, demanding Democratic voters "take back the party" and that elected Democrats fight the new regime tooth and nail. The NAACP has warned, depending on Trump's actions, "We will either be at [his administration's] side or in its face."

That air was the only silver lining to New Yorker editor-in-chief David Remnick's apocalyptic election-night column: "To combat authoritarianism, to call out lies, to struggle honorably and fiercely in the name of American ideals — that is what is left to do."

And it was Clinton's plea on Wednesday, in her impossibly composed, gracious, and hopeful address: "Never stop believing that fighting for what's right is worth it."

The writer Richard Russo told NPR's Morning Edition on Thursday, that for the sake of his two "distracted" Clinton-voting daughters and his grandchildren, "I have work to do." That feeling undoubtedly motivated thousands of Americans who protested in at least ten cities across the country in the wake of Trump's election. This is the question facing every person rising each day to face this waking nightmare: What are you going to do about it?

Paying tribute to soldiers through film

REAL STORIES

War movies that serve as a Remembrance Day backdrop

Richard Crouse
For Metro Canada

William Shakespeare wrote, "Praising what is lost makes the remembrance dear," a fitting sentiment for the most solemn day on the calendar. Every November 11 we pay respect to "the men and women who have served, and continue to serve our country during times of war, conflict and peace." In observation, here's a list of movies to serve as a backdrop on this sombre day.

The Best Years Of Our Lives is 70 years old, but the story of servicemen struggling to rebuild their lives after the Second World War is timely and relevant. Perhaps it feels so authentic because the crew were all Second World War veterans and the main character, who faces discrimination after losing both hands in combat, was played by real-life Nova Scotia-born disabled vet Harold Russell. The actor, who lost both his hands while training paratroopers, won two Oscars for his work, a Best Supporting award and another for being an inspiration to all returning veterans, making him the only performer to win twice for the same role.

The Hill, a little-known British film that features one of Sean Connery's best performances, shows war from a different point of view. Set during the WWII in North Africa, it's the story of a stockade run by Brits to punish deserters. Writer Ray Rigby based the screenplay on his two terms in military prison. Connery wedged it in between Goldfinger and Thunderball and it is a stark contrast to the glamorous work he was doing in the Bond films.

We can't talk about war films on Remembrance Day without paying tribute to Canadian soldiers. A pair of films from Paul Gross, Passchendaele and Hyena Road, are the best-known home-grown explorations of Canadians in battle, but they are very different films.

Passchendaele is a hybrid of romance and war movie based around the 1917 battle for Passchendaele that lasted four months and claimed 600,000 casualties on both sides. The story sprung from a conversation Gross had with his grandfather who told him about bayonetting a young German, killing him during a battle. Years later, as his granddad lay dying in a hospital bed he asked for forgiveness over and over. Only Gross knew he was speaking to the young German he had killed in the First World War.

Gross based the screenplay for Hyena Road on another personal experience, conversations he had with Canadian troops in Afghanistan. It's a complicated part of the world, but this isn't a complicated movie. It's a film that clearly and concisely states its thesis that this conflict isn't a matter of winners or losers, but of uncertainty that will eventually lead to an end state. In that way it's more Zero Dark Thirty than American Sniper.

"Passchendaele was partly the way it was because it was the bridge between the romantic period and the modern era," says Gross. "I think Hyena Road is post-modern in that the nature of warfare contains almost no romanticism anymore. It's very complicated."

Story of forbidden love rings with truth today

Ruth Negga and Joel Edgerton play Mildred and Richard Loving in the story of a couple who married in Virginia in 1958 when interracial unions in that state were against the law. CONTRIBUTED

LOVING

Biopic explores landmark case of interracial couple in 1960s

The history-altering story of Mildred and Richard Loving has been catalogued through photos, news features, a TV biopic and documentary, but writer-director Jeff Nichols still felt it was essential to revisit the interracial couple's life.

The Lovings were at the centre of a landmark 1967 U.S. Supreme Court ruling that unanimously struck down all anti-miscegenation laws. Still, it wasn't until the year 2000 that Alabama became the last state to overturn laws that criminalized interracial relationships.

"They weren't being enforced, but ... it isn't simply that a gavel strikes and the work is accomplished," said Nichols, who helmed the new film Loving, which screened at the Toronto International Film Festival in September.

"It's why the film feels extraordinarily necessary."

In Loving, Australian actor Joel Edgerton and Irish-Ethiopian actress Ruth Negga offer uncanny portrayals of the soft-spoken Virginia couple who became unlikely civil rights activists in their determination to be married.

Unable to tie the knot in their segregated home state, Richard, who was white, and Mildred, who was African-American and Native American, head to Washington, D.C., to marry in June 1958. A month later, arrest warrants are issued, with the local sheriff and his deputies bursting into the couple's bedroom to put them behind bars.

The Lovings are indicted for violating the state's Racial Integrity Act and are advised to plead guilty. A judge sentences the couple to a year in jail, but suspends their sentences provided they leave the state and not return together for 25 years.

Production on Loving began last fall following the historic U.S. Supreme Court ruling on same-sex marriage. Nichols said when he started writing Loving in 2012, he saw an obvious social connection between the Lovings and the modern-day pursuit of marriage equality.

"Their marriage was not an act of defiance — it was an act of love," said Nichols.

"They genuinely loved each other, and the government and society stepped in and told them they couldn't, and that was just strictly unfair."

Nichols said the intimate photos of the pair captured by Life Magazine photographer Grey Villet and The Loving Story documentary released in 2011 served as key resources and great companion pieces to Loving.

"The great thing that the documentary does — that the film just couldn't, given the strict point of view that I held to — is that you actually get to find out about some of the intricacies of the court case, and how the court case travelled through the gauntlet that is the path to the Supreme Court," said Nichols.

"It's really fascinating and uplifting," he added. "It kind of redeemed the possibility of justice in our country for me, that we know this system is good, and that it can work, because we needed it to work desperately in that particular situation."

INTERVIEW

Negga relished role of unlikely heroine

Actress Ruth Negga sees the 50-year-old story of American interracial couple Richard and Mildred Loving revealing itself onscreen like a couple's dance in the fact-based drama Loving, opening Friday.

Richard Loving (Australian actor Joel Edgerton) begins the film by leading. "Slowly, the hand positions change and she's the one taking control. And I think that's really important," said Negga.

Over the nine years that Loving covers, it is a joy to watch Negga's portrayal of Mildred as she goes from shy country girl to confident woman, speaking up with gradually revealed determination against the unfairness endured by her family at a time when many voices were silenced. It's not surprising Best Actress Oscar talk began when the movie had its premiere at Cannes in May and again in September at TIFF.

"I think it's important to see a woman who's quite reserved and shy and quiet show a certain strength, because there's many kind of strengths isn't there?" said the Ethiopia-born and Ireland-raised Negga in her soft Irish lilt.

Negga, born to an Irish mother and Ethiopian father, needed to do considerable research both into that time in America and her character. She turned to Nancy Buirski's 2011 documentary The Loving Story, calling it "my Bible," not only for providing her introduction to "accidental hero" Mildred and the racial politics of the time, but also for the footage of the "bucolic beauty" of rural Virginia, where Loving was filmed.

Written and directed by Jeff Nichols (Take Shelter, Mud), the depth of feeling between the Lovings and the forced suppression of their emotions play out as profoundly genuine. The drama also benefits from careful production design and scenes often suffused with muted golden light, along with costumes that convey not only the time the story is set, but the Lovings' modest means.

She credits her co-star Edgerton who, like her, came from a theatre background, with helping create her characterization of Mildred. That process was aided by spending two weeks in Virginia before filming began, meeting the Lovings' only surviving child, Peggy, visiting the couple's graves and seeing the cell where Mildred was jailed.

These experiences helped her form thoughts about the nature of the Lovings' relationship.

"The overwhelming thing you come away from when you watch the picture is that (they are) deeply connected ... deeply, soulfully connected, deeply in love," she said. "And what's apparent is that love is the kindest, most gentle, most loving respectful love I've ever seen between two human beings. You could almost see it."

BODY IMAGE

From anxiety to makeup tips: Lalonde's book covers a lot

Growing up in Waterloo, Ont. Estée Lalonde was an introverted kid who had trouble making friends.

Now, she's a 26-year-old YouTube sensation, living in London and partnering with brands like Burberry and The Body Shop.

Fittingly, Bloom is the name of her book, published by Appetite by Random House. In it, she focuses on beauty, body image and fashion, while also discussing her experience with childhood anxiety and the depression she experienced after moving to London alone at the age of 19.

The book is a physical addition to her already established online empire, including her Instagram account with 684,000 followers, her Twitter account with 241,000 followers and her YouTube channel with 1.1 million subscribers.

Why a book?

Everything I do is online. I've never really had that moment where I'm like, "Wow, I made this." You can see the views on the Internet, but it's not tangible. I wanted to challenge myself.

How did you start blogging?

When I moved to England seven years ago, I was really upset and I didn't know what to do. I was feeling down. One day I was like, "Maybe I'll get some makeup and cheer myself up." I wasn't even really into makeup at the time. I started Googling "best lipstick" and then I was like, "Oh my god, look at all these blogs!" I didn't even know what a blog was back then. I read them for a couple of months and I was like, "I'm not really doing much else, I could probably make my own." I blogged for six months before I started making videos.

What is it that makes these people want to watch you?

I think just the fact that I'll go on camera with no makeup on and you can see how many zits I have. I think people are like oh, she's not always glamorous and wearing heels. I show both sides — that's relatable.

Starting out, what was challenging?

Really, for three years, I wasn't getting paid to do this. It was a passion and it was fun, but it was a hobby. I didn't know back then, this could be a job.

What's your best beauty tip?

I do face masks in the morning. It's some chill time before doing my hair and I really like it. I use sheet masks. I really like the Lancôme one and this one by SK-II.

How do you get paid now?

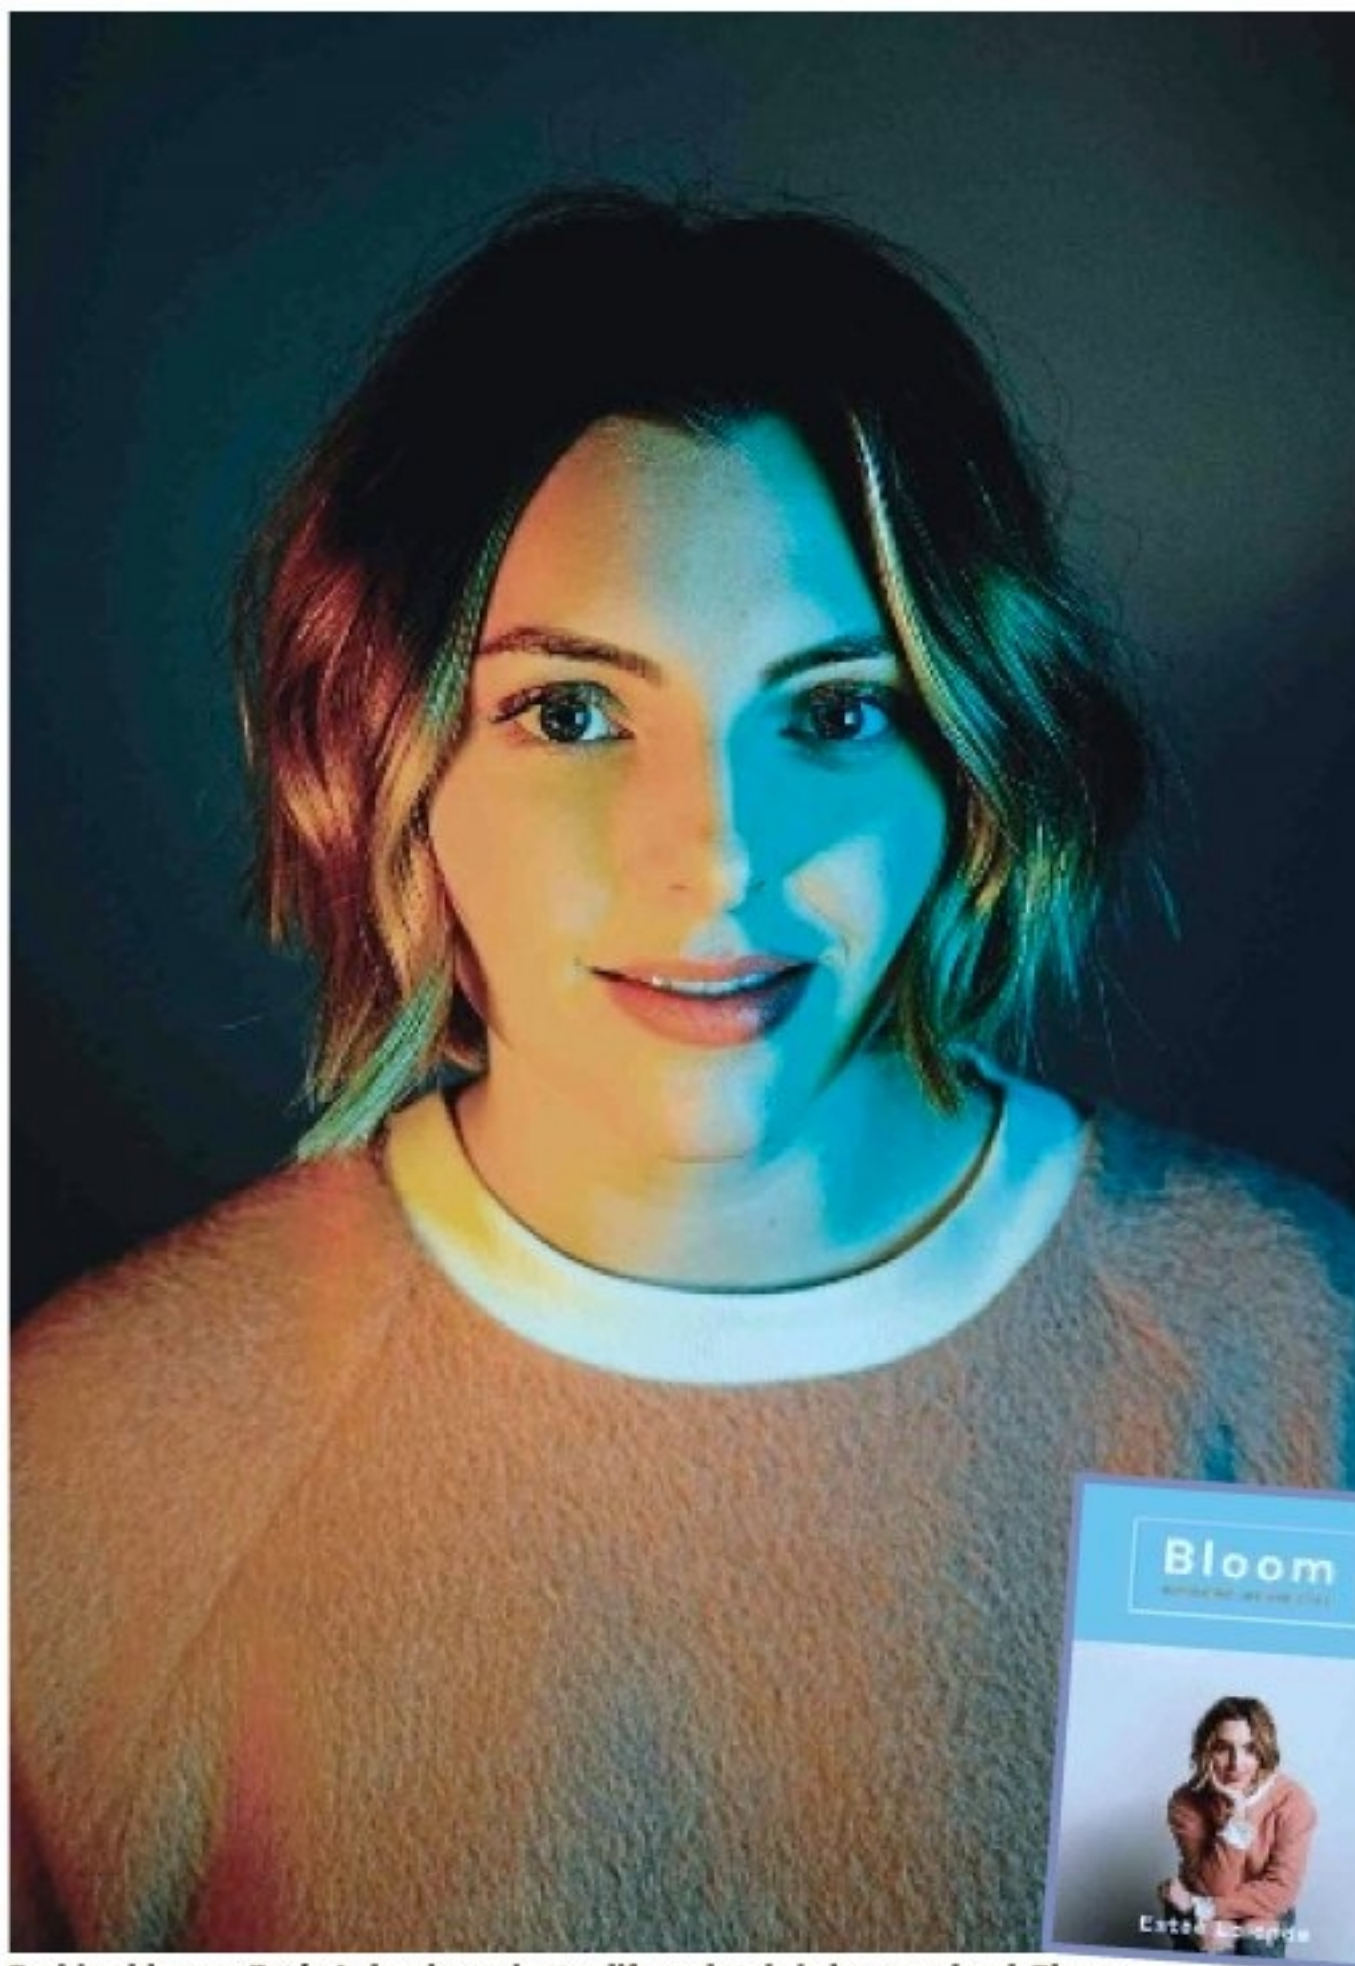

Ads that appear before videos, sponsored videos and brand partnerships. For instance, I'm working with Adidas as an ambassador for the next year. I think bigger brands are starting to be like, "OK, these people have a cool platform and how can we work together?"

How important is it to you to be transparent about partnerships and saying when you've been gifted items?

It's essential. And you have to by law. I want to do it too — I'm proud of every collaboration I do. When I say yes, it's because I love the brand.

BOOK EXCERPT

How to be less anxious

1. Go into social settings thinking "just be yourself."
2. Don't put on any fronts or personas to impress the people around you.
3. The real party doesn't get going till you're much older. If you're still in your teens, you're not missing out now.
4. It's OK not to get along with everyone.
5. Focus on what you care about most and the real friends will come.
6. If I'm feeling really wound up I will go to the wash-room, look at myself in the mirror and say, "You can do this!" That's just the mantra that works for me, but I suggest coming up with your own!
7. When I get anxious I find myself holding my breath. Take a few minutes alone to breathe in and out deeply and slowly — that always calms my nerves.
8. Find someone you feel comfortable around and focus on them until you're relaxed enough to mingle with new people.
9. Before a social situation listen to something such as music or a podcast.
10. Remember that you're not the only person who feels anxious. It's just the feeling of adrenaline rushing through your body and everything will be OK. I wish my younger self knew that there were people out there in the world who would accept me — and not only accept me, but like me! What a concept.

Clues about Mystery Show's future

On her podcast Mystery Show, Starlee Kine has pulled off such sleuth successes as ID-ing the owner of a long lost belt buckle, deciphering the true meaning of a licence plate that read "I Luv 911," and establishing for posterity the precise height of Jake Gyllenhaal, at least according to Jake Gyllenhaal himself.

The show became representative of our current Golden Age of podcasts, topping the iTunes charts in Canada and the U.S. Lauded by iTunes as the Best New Podcast of 2015, it lingered among the Top 100 in Canada until as recently as Oct. 9.

Yet Kine, 41, has created a mystery of her own during the show's extended hiatus. A cryptic statement she posted on Mystery Show's Facebook page and Medium.com only stoked the suspense.

Kine described working on the second season as "rough." Beyond that, she wouldn't speak about any new cases. "It's hard to talk about things that you are actively working on because that can even mess something up creatively," she says.

But Kine will be providing new clues on Nov. 20, when she presents Mystery Show live at Toronto's inaugural Hot Docs Podcast Festival. Kine confirms that part of the show will be an episode that she reads live and plays interview clips from.

The mundane mysteries Kine explores are often overshadowed by the characters she meets along the way: take the 911 operator who received a call about a dog driving a car, for example. The show serves as a forum for Kine to follow her natural curiosity about people.

"If I go to a restaurant and I see someone eating by themselves, even if I've gone there by myself, I almost can't get through dinner because I am so worried about them," she admits.

Kine struggles under the burden of her own standards. Her bar is currently set to Donald Glover heights, as she's been obsessed with his TV series Atlanta.

"I just like watching and reading and listening to things that are really committed to what they're doing. I don't mind failure if it's really trying to do something. I like vision."

Volunteerism integral to community success

York Region hospital gives volunteers world-class opportunity

When Dave Wattling moved from Toronto to Newmarket seven years ago, he was pleasantly surprised. "I found a strong sense of community," he says. "I wanted to be part of it and help strengthen it."

So Wattling, vice president at TELUS Health in Toronto, looked for ways to donate his time, business expertise and passion for health care. He found his calling by volunteering on the board of directors for Southlake Foundation — an organization that supports the ongoing work and goals of Newmarket's Southlake Regional Health Centre. "I've got a long history of volunteer work," says Wattling. "It just fit my desire to give back."

All across the country, volunteers play a vital role in our schools, charities, health care system and more. And with National Philanthropy Day on November 15, this is a good time to think about volunteering. In Wattling's case, his connection to the community has grown significantly since he started as a volunteer board member. Last February, he became chair of Southlake Foundation's Board of Directors — a role that applies his business skill and experience. "The Foundation exists to support the hospital," he says, "so one of my roles is to align the needs and the vision of the hospital with the Foundation's ability to raise the necessary funds."

Another major part of his role is attracting interested board members. He looks for people who want to donate to the hospital, as well as those who have connections to different communities and corporations in York Region.

Even more important, though, is finding volunteers who have a passion for health care. "There are lots of different talents and skills out there," says Neila Poscente, president and CEO of Southlake Foundation, "but that passion and willingness to get involved to make health care better here is huge."

As York Region continues to grow, so do the demands placed on Southlake. That's why Poscente is looking to grow the number of board members over the coming year. If you're passionate about health care, Southlake Foundation might be the right fit for you. A city of rule breakers

Liverpool's independent scene comes together

Tamara Hinson
For Torstar News Service

There's no denying Liverpool One entertainment complex has everything you could want in a city. The massive project has bars full of soccer players celebrating bulging pay packets, glossy department stores and packed nightclubs.

But cast your gaze a little wider beyond the shopping centre and you'll find a blossoming independent scene.

It's one with fewer bearded, full-sleeved hipsters than similar scenes in other U.K. cities, and more of a shout-it-out-loud passion for independent, grass-roots enterprise.

And it's a scene that owes its success to friends David Williams and Oliver Press.

"The fourth Tesco and third Costa Coffee had opened within a square mile of where we lived," recalls Williams, a 25-year-old born-and-bred Liverpudlian. "We had to do something."

The pair started a blog about Liverpool's independent businesses, and, in 2013, they launched Independent Liverpool, where members sign up for an Independent Liverpool card that provides access to discounts at 100 (and growing) local, independent businesses.

"What we love about Liverpool's independent scene is that it's not pretentious," Williams explains.

"It's exploded in the last five years and every week there's something innovative happening. It's always been a city of rule breakers and risk takers, and this creates the perfect environment for an independent scene to thrive."

In the Baltic Triangle, Hipster-filled cafés squeeze alongside grimy warehouses (and I

In Liverpool, street art can be found on the walls and parking spaces alike. Top right: The Cavern Club is where the Beatles played some of their first shows and remains one of the most popular venues in the city. TAMARA HINSON/FOR METRO mean warehouses in the true sense — not ones converted into nightclubs or bars or coffee shops). But I found a few gems, including the Hobo Kiosk.

I noticed this tiny second-hand store because of the wooden chair attached to the outside wall, metres off the ground. Inside, I found haphazardly-stacked piles of rare teen annuals dating back to the '60s, lovingly polished vintage sweet tins and fantastically kitsch homeware.

Unlike the Baltic Triangle, the nearby Ropewalks area's ascension to coolness is definitely complete.

"The Ropewalks is Liverpool's independent mecca," Williams tells me. "It represents Liverpool's past, present and future and radiates the buzz of the city."

So-called because it was once

It's always been a city of rule breakers and risk takers, and this creates the perfect environment for an independent scene to thrive.

David Williams, Independent Liverpool home to the ropemakers whose main business came from the ships calling in at Liverpool's docks, the area comprises several long, straight streets adjacent to each other. Legend states they were designed this way because the tradesmen needed to lay out their lengths of rope.

The streets are filled with independent businesses: galleries, bookshops and record stores. One of my favourites is Leaf on Bold Street. Inside the spacious, airy café, a huge light installation declares: "Where there's tea there's hope."

It's incredibly homely, with frilly lampshades, enormous sofas and a menu listing 60 types of tea. Homemade cakes are displayed under ornate glass lids.

Other Ropewalks favourites include Rennie's Arts and Crafts, a 40-year-old art store where staff still tote up customers' bills on calculators, and Lucha Libre, a Mexican street-food restaurant where the food is authentic and delicious.

One afternoon, I take a short-cut and find myself staring at an enormous mural — a smiling woman rising up out of a fish-filled expanse of water. It covers the entire side of a building which faces onto a car park.

But my companion then points out another piece of street art. Every single one of the car parking spaces has been personalized, with names — Earl, Betty, Bob and Iris, to name a few — painted neatly in bright white paint.

And while other city centres are all too often filled with identikit restaurants and bars, in Liverpool, even the pubs owned by larger companies have an independent streak.

One of the newest restaurants is the Old Blind School. The gastropub is housed in a building that dates back to 1791, once housed one of the U.K.'s first schools for the blind. Beyond the weathered stone façade is a beautiful wrought iron staircase, artfully exposed brickwork and sculptures of hands acting out sign language.

It's the perfect place to line my stomach prior to my last hurrah — a night at the famous Cavern Club, a Liverpool institution and the birthplace of the Beatles. The subterranean venue is hot and cramped, but the vibe is fantastic, and the Rolling Stones tribute act is going down a storm.

The lead singer, who prances across the stage — head jutting, limbs flailing — has obviously spent a huge amount of time studying Mick Jagger.

At the end of his set, he spends five minutes doing star jumps on the spot. I don't remember this being one of Jagger's trademark moves, but then again, in Liverpool, things are rarely done by the book.

Hawaii volcanoes 'one heckuva hike'

Guided tours get as close as possible to moving lava

Jennifer Allford
For Torstar News Service

We're walking down a gravel road toward the spot where lava is pouring into the ocean like cake batter into a pan. We're transfixed by the giant billow of steam caused when lava hits the water.

The ocean is to our left and fields of black lava stretch up the mountain to our right. A line of smoke runs down the mountain where sparse trees have burst into flames because of the 1,200 C molten rock running in a tunnel underneath.

It's going to be one heckuva hike.

We're at Hawaii Volcanoes National Park, a UNESCO World Heritage Site on the east side of Hawaii Island and home to one of the most active volcanoes in the world.

About 1.8 million people

About 1.8 million people come to the Hawaii Volcanoes National Park every year. THE ASSOCIATED PRESS come to see the volcano every year, many driving to the lava lake at the top of the mountain. Visitors can rent a bike or hop on a boat to see the "ocean entry."

We avoid the ocean entry, taking a hard right off the road to hike the black lava up toward the peak.

"The goal is for us to get really close to moving lava," says our guide Dominik Stauber, co-owner of Hawaii Outdoor Guides.

We're well equipped for the task. Stauber has set us up in lightweight packs with all the snacks and equipment we need for the 20-kilometre trek, including six bottles of water.

The first few steps are tentative — it feels like you're walking on a macaron and you might crash through to the gooey part in the middle.

We stop now and then to take down a bottle of water, rest and notice the shiny blue flecks in the black rock we're sitting on. Stauber hauls out his binoculars to look for orange.

We find it, coming around a bend to spot a "toe" of lava peeking out under a bed of black a couple of metres away. We move back a little to cooler ground. The toe bursts and the lava starts creeping toward us. It sizzles. We gasp.

When it's really hot, the lava can move about a foot a minute.

WHEN YOU GO

Go on the lava flow hike The hike with Hawaii Outdoor Guides costs $179 U.S. per person. It's about 45 minutes from Hilo to Hawaii Volcanoes National Park.

Don't pocket the lava Lily Dudoit, who gives cultural tours of lava artifacts around the Sheraton Kona, says, "It comes down to one simple fact. It belongs here."

Do stop for poke You'll need some protein before your hike. Try the Suisan Fish Market in Hilo for poke — rice (brown or white) with two types of cubed, flavoured raw fish.

But after a few metres, the flow stops as suddenly as it starts.

It cools down fast when it hits the deep freeze of the 28 C air, Stauber explains. After we take a few (hundred) pictures of boiling rock, we get our headlamps ready and start hiking out.

The black lights up as the sun fades. Lava contains silica — glass — that reflects the light from our headlamps and the stars (the newer the lava the shinier, because the glass hasn't been broken down yet).

We lie on our backs to enjoy the other light show, the thick blanket of stars, and the plume glowing orange in the dark. There's a shooting star. And another.

Back on the gravel road, people returning from the ocean entry zoom past us on their bikes.

I admit I'm jealous of their wheels as we trudge toward the parking lot, our headlamps bobbing in the dark. But as I take another swig from my fifth water bottle and turn around for a last look at that orange in the distance, I know I wouldn't trade that hike for anything.

Dickey deserves more in exit

Richard Griffin

On Thursday morning the Atlanta Braves signed free-agent right-hander R.A. Dickey to a one-year contract, plus an option. According to the Atlanta Journal-Constitution, the former Blue Jays starter will receive $7.5 million in 2017, plus an $8-million club option for 2018 with a $500,000 buy-out. The 42-year-old knuckleballer was earning $12 million with the Jays in the final season of a four-year deal.

Most Jays fans will simply say good riddance to Dickey and his capricious specialty pitch and, hey, let's find a legitimate backup catcher for Russ Martin. Dickey's declared free agency was greeted with an apathetic shrug from fans. Realistically, Dickey deserves a better send-off for his four-year body of work in a Toronto uniform.

Fans mainly remember and resent him for the frustrating nature of his ever-dancing knuckler. They will remember the fact that he needed a personal catcher, Josh Thole, and many fans will vividly remember one or more of the 15 frustrating starts in which he failed to last at least six innings while also giving up five or more earned runs. In those 15 horrible starts out of 130, his ERA came out to 11.09. In his other 115 Jays assignments, Dickey averaged more than 6-1/3 innings with a solid 3.39 ERA.

Fans will resent Dickey for the fact that he won a Cy Young Award with the Mets in 2012, but never came close with the Jays. They will remember him poorly every time Mets right-hander Noah Syndergaard pitches on television, flashing his 100-plus m.p.h. fastball, while Dickey topped out at 84 m.p.h.

Manager John Gibbons remembers some of the positive reasons why the durable righty stayed in the rotation, until being bumped in August.

"He was steady as can be for four years," Gibbons said upon hearing the news. "He won in double figures, ate up a lot of innings and there was something to the knuckleball effect on other teams."

Dickey's arrival in Toronto was a classic case of being in the wrong place, but maybe at the right time. Then GM Alex Anthopoulos had flown personally to his home in Nashville and agreed to a contract extension, lucrative considering he was a 38-year-old who had just posted his first good back-to-back years, including the Cy.

Though Dickey sounded unsure about his future plans during the playoffs, it was clear that even at his advanced baseball age he never had any thoughts of retiring. He just didn't wish to be the malcontent story, taking the focus away from teammates.

If he was going to continue his career, it would never be with the Jays. After four years he needed a return to the NL East, with no DH and several teams that always under-compete. Consider that in his three years with the Mets he was 39-28 with a 2.95 ERA, allowing 55 home runs in 616-2/3 innings. In four Jays seasons battling in the AL East, he was 49-52 with a 4.05 ERA, R.A. Dickey won't be returning to the Blue Jays in 2017. The knuckleballer signed with the Atlanta Braves on Thursday. STEPHEN DUNN/GETTY IMAGES allowing 114 homers in 824-1/3 innings.

Dickey's arrival in 2013 coincided with the return of Gibbons and the acquisition of big-name players including shortstop Jose Reyes, left-fielder Melky Cabrera and starting pitchers Mark Buehrle and Josh Johnson. That was supposed to return the Blue Jays to the post-season for the first time in 21 years.

The Jays' payroll was the highest in team history. Anthopoulos and president Paul Beeston brought back the franchise's original blue jerseys and made the bold roster moves to revitalize a flagging brand. Vegas odds listed the Jays as winter favourites. They failed, but the plan did bring new fans to the show.

The Jays reached the ALCS the past two seasons, but Dickey was left off the playoff roster last month. Gibbons had six starters and only needed four.

The Braves need to sign solid players because they will be opening a sparkling new ballpark northeast of Atlanta in 2017 and need to win some games.

There's good news and bad news for Dickey in signing with Atlanta.

The good news is that the new park is close to his Nashville home — "three hours, 15 minutes from doorstep to doorstep."

The bad news is that Atlanta's elevation is 1,050 feet above sea level, with the thin Georgia air creating a type of east-of-the-Mississippi launching pad for homers.

McGregor, UFC set to take Big Apple by storm

Conor McGregor looked like he strolled straight off a New York fashion show catwalk in his white Gucci mink coat as he raised a steel chair high over his head and took aim on Eddie Alvarez's skull.

UFC president Dana White snatched the top of the chair before McGregor clocked his UFC 205 main event foe. McGregor could only smirk as he asked a frothing crowd at Madison Square Garden how much a chair shot would cost him in a fine.

McGregor was once docked $150,000 for tossing a water bottle at a press conference. He could keep the cash this time — McGregor had his eyes and hands on Alvarez's lightweight championship belt. McGregor was tardy to Thursday's press conference — hey, New York only waited more than two decades for a UFC debut, so what's 15 more minutes — and Alvarez had stormed off waiting for the challenger to show up. McGregor arrived quite fashionably late, skipped across the stage, and promptly swiped the belt Alvarez had left behind at the podium.

"I operate on my own time, and I'm running early on my time," McGregor said.

The faceoff melded the title-fight gravitas of the 1971 Joe Frazier-Muhammad Ali bout at the Garden with the steel-chair silliness of Hulk Hogan and Mr. T vs. Roddy Piper and Paul Orndorff in the first WrestleMania.

"This is not like any other fight," White said. "This is a massive enormous show."

The promotion wasted no time in announcing it would return for UFC 209 on Feb. 11 at Barclays Center in Brooklyn.

"This is what confidence looks like," the decked out Mc-Gregor said as thousands of fans erupted in cheers.

This is what UFC in NYC looks like at MSG.

Ultimate Fighting Championship is stoked for its legalized return and loaded UFC 205 card with three title fights and some of its biggest stars for Saturday night's pay-per-view.

McGregor, the Irish fighter with the brash public persona, could have sold out the Garden on the strength of his name alone. The featherweight champion and the UFC seem poised to smash MSG's gate record set in a 1999 boxing match between Lennox Lewis and Evander Holyfield. That bout drew $13.5 million and more than 21,000 fans stuffed MSG.

So the New York revenue flow zealously starts on Saturday night.

The chairs will be filled with fans and not in the hands of a championship challenger.

UFC wants to prove to New York it was worth the wait. "Finally we're here," White shouted. "The biggest, baddest fight card in UFC history!"

Backup bigs give Casey options

Young centres bring different tools to court behind starter

There's the bubbly, always smiling Brazilian who has been betrayed by his body more times than he'd like to admit.

There's the rather laconic Austrian still finding his way in the NBA, a promising youngster who discovers something new every time he steps on the court.

It is an unusual coupling, this two-headed Toronto Raptors centre monster of Lucas Nogueira and Jakob Poeltl, but it has given rise to optimism around the team that a suitable backup exists for Jonas Valanciunas, and a starter for whenever the incumbent is unavailable.

Coach Dwane Casey is now never certain which one he'll turn to each night, going by feel in the moment and a sense of matchup and need, comfortable that one of them will figure it out.

And it doesn't matter which one, really.

Poeltl had assumed the mantle of Valanciunas backup and replacement. He started the two games that Valanciunas has missed with a sore knee and acquitted himself well for a first-year player.

But Nogueira came to the rescue Wednesday night in Oklahoma City, recovered from yet another injury — a tweaked ankle picked up in the final pre-season game — to provide the front-court athletic spark the Raptors needed to finish out a 112-102 win over the Thunder.

"(It's) matchups more than anything else," Casey said here Thursday. "Speed and quickness. Lucas does a really good job of really getting out on some of the speedster point guards ... and there's some matchups on the big guys that Poeltl does a better job."

The two are disparate personalities with disparate skills that give Casey options. Nogueira can be electric, taking lob passes to finish off screen-and-roll plays that energize his teammates and presenting an imposing, if thin, presence at the rim because of his freakish length.

Poeltl, for a rookie, is polished in many intricate facets of the game. He has a nose for the ball off the glass, generally sets solid screens and doesn't usually make the same mistake twice.

For Casey, it's a matter of who can help the most in a hurry.

"I said at the beginning of the year, it's going to be a nightly personnel-driven situation," the coach said. TORSTAR NEWS SERVICE

CFL

Jackson emerges as MOP finalist

Five years ago Ernest Jackson was playing in the Ultimate Indoor Football League. Now the dangerous receiver is the East Division nominee for Most Outstanding Player in the CFL.

Jackson, who broke into the league in 2012 with the B.C. Lions, wore his trademark smile as he spoke Friday of the recognition for his performance this season.

"It's an incredible honour for me personally," Jackson said. "It feels great to have something like that knowing how much I grinded it to get this far and to see it all come together is a beautiful thing."

"It's been a great journey coming from arena football. I'm taking it all in and I'm enjoying it."

Jackson is one of four Ottawa receivers who surpassed the 1,000-yard mark for a second straight season with 1,225 yards and 10 touchdowns. Most impressive was the fact Jackson, a native of Rochester, N.Y., didn't drop a pass all year.

Calgary quarterback Bo Levi Mitchell was the MOP nominee in the West. THE CANADIAN PRESS

Carpenter set to equal record

Canada captain will earn 76th cap versus the Irish in Dublin

Captain Aaron Carpenter will move within one game of Al Charron's Canadian record of 76 caps when he leads Canada out for a high-profile rugby test against fifth-ranked Ireland in Dublin on Saturday.

The Canadian men, ranked 18th in the world, will have to contend with an Aviva Stadium crowd of more than 50,000 looking to celebrate an Irish team coming off a historic 40-29 win over the top-ranked All Blacks last Saturday in Chicago.

"It's a big occasion," Canadian coach Mark Anscombe said. "We don't get Tier 1 games very often. So we're very conscious of the importance of performing well on Saturday."

Canada is 0-6-1 all-time against Ireland, including a 50-7 defeat at the 2015 Rugby World Cup. The Canadians are a 33-1 underdog this weekend, according to British bookmaker Ladbrokes. The Irish, meanwhile, are on a high after their first win over New Zealand in 111 years of trying. The All Blacks conceded 40 points for only the fifth time in history while seeing their record win streak end at 18 tests.

The fans Saturday will be seeing a new Irish team. Coach Joe Schmidt has named a totally new starting 15 to face Canada, with an eye to resting players for the Nov. 19 return match against the All Blacks and a Nov. 26 date with third-ranked Australia.

There are three uncapped players in the Irish starting lineup, with another five waiting on the bench.

Flanker Peter O'Mahony, who has 35 caps and captained Ireland to a 40-14 win over Canada in Toronto in June 2013, will lead the home side. The Irish backline features Keith Earls, who has 52 caps while the pack includes back-rower Sean O'Brien (42 caps).

"You look at the calibre of some of the players that they have in this team that's playing against us and they're quality players," said Anscombe. "They'll also take it as an opportunity to prove to Joe what they're capable of doing and want to press on to play the All Blacks the following week."

Saturday's game is the first on Canada's three-match European tour. Anscombe's team will face No. 16 Romania on Nov. 19 in Bucharest and No. 14 Samoa on Nov. 25 in Grenoble, France. Carpenter, a 33-year-old forward from Brantford, Ont., will earn cap No. 75 in Dublin.

"He really impresses me, Aaron, as an individual," said Anscombe. "He goes about his work in a very professional manner. He's strong, he's tough and he's durable. And he holds a lot of respect from the squad so he was an easy selection for the captaincy."

Charron, a hard-nosed forward, won his 76 caps from 1990 to 2003. Carpenter, who will start at No. 8 but can also play hooker, made his international debut in 2005 against the U.S. Anscombe is starting an experienced and talented back line featuring DTH van der Merwe, Taylor Paris, Ciaran Hearn, Conor Trainor, Connor Braid, Matt Evans and Gordon McRorie.

Djustice Sears-Duru, Ray

Barkwill and Jake Ilnicki form a tough front row, backed by locks Brett Beukeboom and Evan Olmstead.

Carpenter is joined in the back row by 25-year-old Kyle Baillie and 21-year-old Lucas Rumball. THE CANADIAN PRESS

IT'S ALL IN THE STARS Your daily horoscope by Francis Drake

Aries March 21 - April 20
Today you will feel more emotional about things. It's as if your feelings catch you off guard. Don't worry about this, because this planetary influence is gone by tomorrow.

Taurus April 21 - May 21
By evening, the Moon will be in your sign, where it will stay until late Monday. This actually brings you a bit of extra good luck. Enjoy this advantage!

Gemini May 22 - June 21
A conversation with a female acquaintance might be important to you today. You'll find it easy to let down your hair and put your cards on the table.

Cancer June 22 - July 23
For some reason, personal details about your private life are public today, at least in the eyes of bosses, parents and VIPs. There's nothing you can do about this except to cooperate.

Leo July 24 - Aug. 23
Do something to satisfy your urge for adventure and a chance to learn something new. Travel somewhere if you can. At the very least, be a tourist in your own city.

Virgo Aug. 24 - Sept. 23
Focus on details about shared property, inheritances, taxes and debt today. Tie up loose ends so that they no longer nag you in the back of your mind. Finish something.

Libra Sept. 24 - Oct. 23
You have to go more than halfway when dealing with others today, because the Moon is opposite your sign — simply requires a little cooperation and tolerance.

Scorpio Oct. 24 - Nov. 22
You'll feel good if you do something today that makes you feel better organized. Clear away some clutter. Catch up on your laundry. Make a to-do list.

Sagittarius Nov. 23 - Dec. 21
This is a playful day! Enjoy social outings, playful activities with children and sports events. Social banter with others will please you.

Capricorn Dec. 22 - Jan. 20
Although this is a good time for you to shop for wardrobe items, today is not the day. Do this sort of thing tomorrow, and you will have no regrets.

Aquarius Jan. 21 - Feb. 19
Short trips and conversations with others, plus increased reading, writing and studying, all are things that appeal to you today.

Pisces Feb. 20 - March 20
If shopping today, limit your purchases to gas and food only. Postpone other major purchases for tomorrow. (You'll be glad you did.)
